The Practice of Everyday (Virtual) Life

The thesis title refers to Michel de Certeau's The Practice of Everyday Life (1984), in which he examines the everyday practices of ordinary people, and the individual and tactical 'ways of operating' in the everyday. For the theorists of 'the everyday', there is an invited necessity to create strategies (Lefebvre 1947); construct situations (Debord 1957); or design tactics (de Certeau).

THE PRACTICE OF EVERYDAY LIFE - Jeremiah Community

Everyday life invents itself by positing in countless ways on the property of others 1 Consumer production. Since this work grew out of studies of "popular culture" or marginal groups, I the investigation of everyday practices was first delimited negatively by the necessity of not locating cultural difference in 'groups associated with the "counter-culture"'—groups that were already poaching in countless ways on the property of others.

Reflective Practice and everyday life: A book of Living Resources 7 How to Use this Resource

This Living Resource collection of reflective resources is designed for staff, and patients (their families, carers and communities) to use at any time and to develop a reflective culture in the workplace. Part of the intention of the resource is to make it widely accessible especially: - when a medium may make a difference, - when an individual patient or user needs help, - when an individual user needs help, - when an individual patient or user needs help.

The Practice Of Everyday Life "counter-culture" -groups that were already poaching in countless ways on the property of others.

1 I use the term 'invention' rather than 'creation' because the everyday practices described in this book are always a response to something already in place. They are not something 'out of nothing'. The everyday practices are always a response to existing cultural, institutional, economic, and political structures. They are always a response to existing cultural, institutional, economic, and political structures.
